C. Reading Text

From tiny Irish island to tourist hotspot

When the movie "Star Wars: The Force Awakens" premiered in Dublin, the room broke out in applause at the sight of the Irish island Skellig Michael. During an important film scene the audience is taken to an isolated, mystical island that rises majestically from the blue sea. But this island isn't on some galaxy far, far away. The island Skellig Michael is very real. You don't need a spaceship to get there, you just need a boat to cross the choppy seven miles of open sea off the southwest tip of Ireland. The island is a UNESCO World Heritage site that hosts the remains of a sixth century Christian monastery.

The site has long been a refuge where people went to connect with God. When you land, you are greeted by Bob Harris, a local tourist guide. He will tell you all about a small group of adventurous, deeply religious Christian monks who founded the monastery there. Generations of monks stayed there for over 600 years. They ate birds' eggs and dried fish, they grew vegetables, kept a few sheep and goats for milk and may have received an occasional bag of grain from the mainland. They would go down the steps to the sea early every morning and fish for their first meal. They would spend most of the day praying in the church, tending to their gardens and studying. Their huts, which were round on the outside and rectangular on the inside, were carefully built so that no drop of rain ever entered between the stones. To this day the monks' huts, chapel, and graveyard have remained almost exactly the same. "The magical thing to me is the fact when you look into these dark huts and doorways today you feel exactly what 6th-century men might have felt," Harris said.

However, Skellig Michael has not been such a popular tourist attraction over the centuries because it's hard to get there from the mainland. That will change now because of the movie connection. Gerard Keith, owner of the Lighthouse Guesthouse in Portmagee on the mainland across from Skellig Michael, said, "The movie is generating an enormous amount of interest and bookings – we will have people coming from across the world this summer, from Australia to America." Brenda Thompson, an official from Tourist Ireland said, "Tourist numbers are rising in Ireland because of the fall of the euro against the dollar. That's the reason why trips to Ireland from North America have risen about 15 percent compared to the same period last year."

35 This increase in the number of visitors is good for the Irish economy. The problem is that the expectation has been created that people will be able to reach the island. "We cannot allow too many tourists on such a tiny place – just 180 a day – and so a lot of them will be disappointed", added Gerard Keith. "The boat tours are already more or less sold out for the short May-to-September season." He complained that these restrictions had already
40 cost him and his colleagues £1.8 million in possible earnings. "That's why we are asking for a longer visiting season for Skellig Michael: from April to the beginning of November."

Not everybody is delighted with the idea of ferrying more tourists onto the island. Conservationist Claire O'Halloran complains that Skellig Michael's ecological treasures are being endangered by an aggressive marketing campaign advertising the island. She 45 points out that the eco-system on the island is "extremely fragile" and that it needs a recreational break from the tourists. "These advertisements for the famous Hollywood movie are the biggest threats the island has faced in the last century." One of the major worries among ecologists is the negative effect on protected bird species such as puffins. An increasing number of boats might accidentally bring rats onto the island, which would
50 then endanger birds and their chicks.

In view of these concerns, Tourism Ireland wants to limit the number of visitors. Many tour operators are now changing their programmes to give visitors a flavour of this rocky island in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean even if they cannot set foot on it. Several boat operators are offering boat trips which also take visitors to places where they get a good
55 chance of watching dolphins and whales. "Others provide a number of bus tours that take people out to the Ring of Kerry where on a cloud-free day they can see Skellig Island", said Brenda Thompson. "So although many tourists are not allowed onto the island itself they are able to get near this mystical place in the Atlantic Ocean."

C. Mediation Texts

The “Ireland Adventures” Blog

Claire, Manchester, GB:

Hi everybody, I went on the Skellig Islands Boat Tour yesterday. We sailed round these two pyramid rocks in the Atlantic Ocean, a small one and a big one, and I got a close look at them. But unfortunately we didn't have the chance to get off the boat to climb on the islands. So I was a little disappointed. For most tourists this boat tour is very popular, so it is advisable to book well in advance! If you are looking for a challenge I think you should sign up for the Killarney National Park trip! It is an extremely ambitious cycling and hiking tour. If you need a rest, stop off in Killarney, the shops and cafés are fantastic!

Tom, Perth, Australia:

Hey Ireland fans, the Towers of Moher aren't worth it! One tower is a large pointed rock in the ocean near the coast, the other is just a ruin, but they didn't impress me much. What was more interesting to me was the large variety of animals living there along the steep cliffs, most of them birds: Imagine – 30.000 birds of 29 different species! I'm not really into history but, while on the Skelligs boat tour, I found out that the islands were dedicated to St. Michael in 1044 and they became a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1996. Isn't that amazing?

David, Chicago, USA:

For those who have an appetite for history, I'd suggest the Cliffs of Moher. There's a square stone ruin which they say is the remains of a watchtower built during Napoleon's reign in Europe. Unfortunately, this bus tour is on Mondays and Fridays only. Ireland's first national park "Killarney NP" was a great experience for me. The clear water of its lakes, the mixed woodlands and numerous mountain peaks were my personal highlights of this tour. Really beautiful! And in this park I caught a sight of the only native herd of red deer, which thrilled me even more.

Ela, Mumbai, India:

Hi explorers, the tour to Killarney takes you to a mansion with 65 rooms which was designed and built in 1843. The original owner later sold it to a wealthy Californian whose family gave it to the Irish nation in 1932. How cool! A fantastic sight in the Atlantic Ocean are the 120-meter-high Cliffs of Moher. From the top of the cliffs you can see the surfers below playing in the big waves along this fabulous coastline and, if you are brave enough, you can try it for yourself at Lahinch Surf School. If you are interested in large populations of breeding sea birds, the Skelligs Boat Tour is a must!
